Eaglenest Wildlife Sanctuary: A success story of conservation

—Obang Tayeng

In 2011, the world’s biodiversity as this is life Sanctuary in 2011 is a cradle was bifurcated from Pakke Wildlife and community conservation successful model of joint governance. This is the richest biodiversity hotspot in the world after the Andes in South America.

A bird of paradise, Eagle Nest Wildlife Sanctuary, is a popular destination for all kinds of nature lovers and tourists who visit the place from October to March every year for study of its rich flora and fauna especially of birds. Over 700 species of birds are found here. Bugun Liochigla, the only bird that exists in the world, is found in the sanctuary. Besides these, various species of mammals, amphib- ians and bats, moths and butterflies and vegetation including many varieties of rhododendrons are found in the region. This is the convergence of Bugun Liochigla, Pakke and Lohit Wildlife Sanctuaries covering an area of 3,500 sq km of the con- tinuous forests spread across the two states of Assam and Arunachal Pradesh in five protected areas.

Eaglenest: The sanctuary has derived its name from Red Eagle Division, a regiment of Indian Army which used to operate in the region in the 1950s. A well known as Chuckills Foothill Tenga (CFT) runs through the sanctuary from Ram- lingam, a distance of 8 km from Tenga to Kampring in Assam in Arunachal border. The 14th Dalai Lama used this intract to travel from Tibet to the plains of Assam in 1959 and stayed at a site called Shurin, at an elevation of 2500 m ASL inside the Bugun community forest land. To commemorate his legacy, a site known as Lama Camp is set up at the site where the telegraph station and other modality facilities are offered to tourists by local tour operators.

Discovery of Bugun Liochigla: This unique sanctuary gained more prominence in 2009 with the rare discovery of Bugun Liochigla, a rare bird by Dr. Ramana, an ornithologist and research assistant. Bugun Liochigla is also known as Singhchung Community Reserve Forest. This NGO organized awareness camps on conservation, which includes training on bird watching, making of bird watching glasses, cleaning of plastics and other environment-friendly objects used by visitors in the sanctuary. The locals have周转ed to the new development, India, Glow, their leader, said, “It was Dr Ramana Liochigla who first inspired us and involved some of us in his study of birds. Then DFO Millo Tassar came and advised us to participate in the conservation process. With his support and initiative, this Bugun Community Reserve Forest came up.”

The Buguns who were till recently hunters like many, co-inhabitants of the state have now completely given up hunting and turned pres- surizers of wildlife. According to Dr Ramana, the transformation is in the interest of the locals as they are also now part of conservation and tourism. Also, the locals now receive the Jersey of the National Free Tele-Radiology Project, where the blood samples of the children are processed for the project.

The government has now also developed the tourism infrastructure for tourists at the Lama Camp where they have set up an office for tourism promotion and proper hospitality and Lodging facilities, installation of telecommunication system and better lodging infra- structure is of utmost importance, he says. “Food is a problem here and we can’t install refrigerators because of lack of electricity. Otherwise, visitors love this place immensely,” he adds.
