Indian Air Force day

8th October 1932 was the establishment day for Indian Air Force and hence they celebrate their anniversary every year on the same day. This day is also marked with an investiture ceremony for the achievers held at Air Force Station Hindan, Ghaziabad.

The ceremony is marked in order to spread awareness about the efforts that the Indian Air Force executives and deals with. The Air Force day celebration follows traditional parades and colorful air canopies. There are different kinds of formations made by the fighter jet pilots with their respective aircraft in the air which are a delight to watch. Oath taking ceremony is also conducted during the ceremony, which is administered by the Chief of the Air Staff.

The parades are conducted at all the respective bases of Indian Air Force (56 in total). The day marks special tributes to the brave hearts of Indian Air Force which lost their lives during various operations executed by Indian Air Force. They have also upgraded in the types of aircraft they have been utilizing. A proper display of the vintage and modern aircrafts is done. Even the latest aircrafts and recently inducted helicopters are also displayed to show the power capacity of Indian Air Force.

Operations executed by Indian Air Force Day

India would be celebrating its 86th establishment this year. In these sixty eight years, Indian Air Force has executed several significant and successful operations such as Operation Blue Star (most recent operation held by Indian Air Force to rescue the people stuck in Utrakhand due to floods), Operation Poomalai (for delivering supplies at Jaffna, Sri Lanka), Operation Cactus (which was launched to rescue people from Maldives), Operation Meghdoot (which was launched in 1986 wherein Glaciers when Kashmir issue was heated up), and Operation Vijay (which was launched to claim Goa).

About Indian Air Force

Indian Air Force has a primary responsibility to protect Indian airspace and can also carry out aerial warfare for the duration of a clash. Indian Air Force is the fourth largest air force in the world, and Indian Air Force was initially referred to as ‘Royal Indian Air Force’ from the year 1945 to 1950. But when India became Republic the prefix was dropped and then ‘Indian Air Force’ was adopted. The motto of Indian Air Force is ‘Vayushakti’ which was coined by Bhaagavad Gita’s eleventh chapter. The English translation of the motto is ‘touch the sky with glory’.

Pollinators declining may pose threat to food security

Pollination is an important biological event in a terrestrial ecosystem. This mutualistic relation, between pollinators and most flowering plants, not only benefit themselves, but also maintain a dynamic functioning of the ecosystem. For an agro-ecosystem, pollinators are key contributors of fruit and crop-production. They help to cross-pollinate the variety of flora, thus expanding the biodiversity of many species. They also help in the process of apiculture methods. Different species of pollinators are responsible for pollination in various ecosystems. The importance of pollinators is being increasingly realized, as the ecosystem health relies on their function and interaction. In an agro-ecosystem, pollinators are even more critical as they help in pollinating crops and thus contribute to crop-yield, both quantitatively & qualitatively. The major function of pollinators is their role in ensuring a harmony among the inter-dependent species though crop-yield, both quantitatively & qualitatively. The major function of pollinators is their role in ensuring a harmony among the inter-dependent species through pollination.

1. Declining of insect pollinators:

As per FAO (2011), many researchers have identified invasive species, pesticides, land-use changes such as habitat fragmentation, agricultural intensification and climate change as negative factors affecting the pollinators. The populations of honeybees are already very fast in different countries (Table 1).

Table: Population decline of honeybees around the globe

From this report, it is believed that the highest annual rate of erosion of honeybees population has been recorded in USA (5% per year) and the lowest is in India (1.6%). The population decline is very alarming in developed countries like USA (Table 2). In the USA, Mexico and Canada, both feral and managed honeybees decline by 25-30% between 1990 and 1968.

2. Declining of Bats

Although, bat populations have declined worldwide in recent decades. Decline of bat populations in USA was due to 2.5% pollen-feeding bats are now listed endangered. Being insectivorous, bats help in insect-suppression and maintains a balance in their population which is important for crop-production. In the forest, any change in insect population will affect the ecosystem. However, global warming will affect more the temperate species. In the USA, Germany and Mexico, last 15 yrs, bat populations have declined by 40% (Table 1).

3. Declining of Bats

The effect of climate change will be more the temperate species. Being insectivorous, bats help in insect-suppression and maintains a balance in their population which is important for crop-production. In the forest, any change in insect population will affect the ecosystem. However, global warming will affect more the temperate species.

5. Conclusion

Pollination serves the humanity in a terrestrial ecosystem. This mutualistic relationship between pollinators and plant species is very crucial in maintaining the biodiversity of the ecosystem.
