Pulses may be defined as the dried edible seeds of cultivated legumes. They belong to the family of peas, beans, and lentils. The pulses are a large family and various species are capable of surviving in very different climates and soils. Pulses are cultivated in all parts of the World, and they occupy an important place in human diet.

1. Good for Your Heart;

Including more pulses in your diet may lower your risk of cardiovascular disease, according to the Linus Pauling Institute. Pulses are high in fiber. For example, a 1 cup serving of cooked lentils contains more than 13 g of fiber, meeting 60 percent of your daily value. The fiber in the pulses may improve heart health by lowering cholesterol levels. Pulses also are high in potassium. Including more potassium-rich foods in your diet can lower blood pressure by countering the effects of sodium.

2. Lower Risk of Diabetes;

Pulses are a low-glycemic index food. The glycemic index ranks foods on how it affects your blood sugar. Foods with a low-glycemic index cause only a small rise in blood sugar, while foods with a high glycemic index cause a spike in blood sugar. People who include more low-glycemic foods in their diet have lower rates of diabetes. And if you already have diabetes, including pulses in your diet can make it easier for you to manage your blood sugar.

3. High in Protein;

Pulses also make a healthy and inexpensive source of protein. Most pulses do not provide all of the essential amino acids, making them an incomplete source of protein. But if you include other grains and vegetables in your diet, you should be able to meet all of your amino acid needs. Soy beans, however, are one of only a few plant foods that provide all of the essential amino acids, making it a complete source of protein like meat. A 1 cup serving of cooked soybeans contains 26 g of protein, while a 3 oz portion of cooked chicken contains 24 g of protein.

4. Good Source of Folate;

Pulses also are a good source of folic acid, a B vitamin needed to produce and maintain new cells. Folate is especially important during periods of rapid growth, such as pregnancy and infancy. Women of childbearing age need adequate intake of folic acid to limit their risk of having a child born with a neural tube defect. Folate content varies among the different pulses. For example, a 1/2 cup serving of cooked black-eyed peas contains 105 mg of folate, and the same size serving of cooked great northern beans contains 55 mg.

5. Good for Heart;

Pulses help in maintaining a healthy heart. Studies suggest that regular intake of beans or pulses contributes to a reduction in serum cholesterol and other blood lipids which are a major risk factor for cardiovascular diseases.

6. Helps in weight loss;

Regular intake of pulses may aid in weight management. Consumption of pulses increases the safety level hence controls appetite and helps in weight loss.

7. Helps to maintain sugar levels;

Patricia Sadri, well known Indian nutritionist from OYSTER says "Pulses contain protein and fiber. Fiber helps the insulin to work effectively. It also helps to lose weight which, in turn helps in maintaining good sugar levels. Having a regular intake of pulses plays an important role in maintaining a good sugar control".

8. Helps to maintain blood pressure;

Pulses are rich in potassium and protein content; controls the sodium in food and helps to lower blood pressure.

9. Do non-vegetarians also need to add pulses to their daily diet?

"Non-vegetarians must include pulses in their daily diet as they are rich in protein but with the likes they are low in fat and high in fiber as compared to the non veg food which is high in protein but the same time also rich in fat and cholesterol and low in fiber".

10. India's Food Security:

"Anjali Chorasia GHSS, Basar Lower Siang 5th 401 80.2% & Patricia Sadri, well known Indian nutritionist from OYSTER says "Pulses contain protein and fiber. Fiber helps the insulin to work effectively. It also helps to lose weight which, in turn helps in maintaining good sugar levels.
