How to have a better relationship

Being a part of a prestigious school jawahar navodaya vidyalaya I got an opportunity to read one beautiful story in my english text book named The Gift of Magi

One of the moral lessons of “The Gift of the Magi” is that we often don’t value what we truly should. Jim loves Della, her hair included, and he doesn’t need a fancy watch chain for Christmas to make him happy—he already has a wife he adores. Della, for her part, loves Jim and doesn’t need hair combs to make her happy. In other words, they already have what truly makes them happy—each other—and the Christmas presents are secondary. The sacrifices they make for each other, as Della sells her hair and Jim sells his watch, show how much they love each other and show the sacrifices they are willing to make for each other. This love and willingness to sacrifice what means the most to them for the sake of the other person are their true presents, not material goods.

Another moral lesson of this story is that we will give up possessions that mean a great deal to us because of love for another.another moral is that happiness does not depend on money but on love.still another is that spirit of Christmas is that of giving not of taking.

This evergreen story speaks volumes about true relationship and signifies this great quotes

People were created to be loved. Things were created to be used. The reason why the world is in chaos, is because things are being loved en people are being used.

Falling in love is the easy part. The challenge for couples is how to rekindle the fires of romance from time to time and cultivate the mature, trusting love that is the hallmark of a lasting relationship.

When we say I love you, what do we really mean? ??

Terry Hatkoff, a California State University sociologist, has created a love scale that identifies six distinct types of love found in our closest relationships.

Romantic: Based on passion and sexual attraction

Best Friends: Fondness and deep affection

Logical: Practical feelings based on shared values, financial goals, religion etc.

Playful: Feelings evoked by flirtation or feeling challenged

Possessive: Jealousy and obsession

Unselfish: Nurturing, kindness, and sacrifice

Researchers have found that the love we feel in our most committed relationships is typically a combination of two or three different forms of love. But often, two people in the same relationship can have very different versions of how they define love. Dr. Hatkoff gives the example of a man and woman having dinner. The waiter flirts with the woman, but the husband doesn’t seem to notice, and talks about changing the oil in her car. The wife is upset her husband isn’t jealous. The husband feels his extra work isn’t appreciated.

What does this have to do with love? The man and woman each define love differently. For him, love is practical, and is best shown by supportive gestures like car maintenance. For her, love is possessive, and a jealous response by her husband makes her feel valued.

Conclusion

Relationships–of all kinds–are like sand held in your hand. Held loosely, with open hand, the sand remains where it is. The minute you close your hand and squeeze tightly to hold on, the sand trickles through your fingers. You may hold onto some of it, but most will be spilled. A relationship is like that.

So in nutshell forgiveness is a body and love is a soul of any successful relationship. We must learn to strike a fine balance between both.

I’ve learned that your partner may forget what you said, what you did, but he /she will never forget how you made him/her feel.

A great marriage is not when the ‘perfect couple’ comes together. It is when an imperfect couple learns to enjoy their differences.” -Dave Meurer
