Contact Tracing carried out at ITBP and Quarantine Facility Centres

With this the tally of Covid-19 positive cases have suddenly surged to three. ITBP Quarantine Centre accounting for one and two other from Past Facility Quarantine Centre Aalo. Meanwhile, lockdowns are being carried out in different villages and community level in West Siang district and Village Community Dar and schools are being used as Home Quarantine as many of the hubs have no space to isolate the returnees.

Aalo, July 21: The DSM, Dr. Jamjam Kato and team continued their Contact Tracing work braving inclement weather at ITBP and Quarantine Facility Centres of Aalo Town. Altogether 46 samples were collected out of which one turned out to be positive. The patient was immediately shifted to Covid Care Centre at Aalo. The True Net Machine was being installed and the DSM hoisted himself first in the machine on trial.

It is necessary to create a healthy environment to safeguard the present and future generation. There are several threats to nature like deforestation, illegal wildlife trade, pollution, using plastics, chemicals etc. Each has provided basic necessity to live like water, air, soil, minerals, trees, animals, food etc. So, we should help nature grow and healthy. Industrial development and several other factors are also responsible for the depletion of nature. Whatever we do it affects on the globe because soil is one and somehow linked together.

The history and origin of the World Nature Conservation Day is unknown but the main aim of celebrating it on 28 July is to come together and support nature, don’t exploit it. Conservation of nature is the wise management and utilization of natural resources. As we know that due to natural imbalance, we are facing several problems like global warming, various diseases, natural disasters, increased temperature etc. Therefore, for the next generation it is necessary to preserve it. So, it is important to raise awareness among people all over the world to understand the importance of saving resources, recycle it, preserve it and also understand the consequences of damaging it.

Conservation of nature is very necessary, even scientists have also warned us about the mass extinctions in near future. Several documentaries about nature show that resources are being wasted. Due to global warming temperature is increasing day by day, storms and level of sea is also increasing, freshness glaciers are melting which threaten lives. We are connected each other with natural resources. The natural world is facing an increasing threat from unsustainable practices and the challenge is how to preserve and conserve nature to achieve sustainable development.

This short moral story on time management, has been taken from the real-life of Benjamin Franklin. He was “The President of USA”. Generally, we should always try to read the biographies of eminent personalities. But, his biography is a notable one. He was working consistently. But, people were complaining that he was not doing this and that, he was not meeting them, etc. He got fed up with this, so he started noting down and observing himself. He made a diary and he wrote a list of worth doing tasks, less important tasks, least important tasks, and avoidable tasks. He tick marked finished tasks daily. After a week, he perceived, he had been working on less important and avoidable tasks more than worth doing tasks.

So he realized his past mistakes and improved himself accordingly. Time management is the heart of every successful work. It is the skill that is liked and exercised by the talented and competent to ensure the success and progress of their dedicated tasks. The most successful people have certain common habits in their daily routines. These habits help them to contribute to their success and can be considered good habits to form for yourself. You can use this simple life hack to improve your productivity. It is the habit of making a list before the day begins. Here are the 3 steps to planning and making your daily list.

1. Plan Your Day The Night Before Every minute spent in planning saves 10 minutes in execution. Sit down with a piece of paper and write down everything that you need to do the coming day. If for any reason you don’t do this, it should be the first thing you do every morning. When you write a list you have a track to run on. Actually writing a list clarifies your thinking and goals and moreover writing down a list forces you to think at a higher level. If you start working from a to-do list you increase your output 25% each day.
2. Set Priorities On Your To-Do List Before You Start the Day Work from the 80/20 rule. If you have 10 items on your list of things to do, two will be more important than all of the other items put together. Once you identify these most important tasks, it brings us to the final step in starting your day.
3. Complete the Most Important Daily Task First Begin immediately on your most important task and focus on it only until completion.

Conclusion
If you can develop these habits of successful people and do these things, plan your day the day before, organize your tasks in order of importance, and complete your most important task first during your day. You will increase your productivity overnight.
